Get Your House in Order

Katie Sherrod

Uncmn

Productivity prior to motherhood was measured in concrete, objective terms, goals achieved, and things accomplished. In motherhood, the measure of productivity is completely different because loving, nurturing, studying a person with deep intention and thought and quietly caring for a baby doesn't produce anything visible to check off a 'to do' list (matter of fact, it may 'get in the way' of your anticipated activities for that day). Renew your thinking. Remember your purpose in the souls entrusted to your care.

1. What is the overflow from your heart into your home? What needs to happen for you to “get your heart in order”?
2. Are you and your husband on the same page? What are some of the guidelines and expectations you have established for your children? Have you clearly made them known? What are ways you can train them in making right choices?
3. God has given this “house” to you and no one else. What is something you can intentionally implement to get your house in order?
4. How are your personal responses in your obedience to God? What is your attitude? Are you more concerned with what others think of you and your parenting more than getting your heart and your child’s heart rightly responding to our gracious, loving Father?
5. What are some important character traits, verses, sayings, behaviors that are important to you and your family? What are ways you will teach your children these things?
